

Sowing the seeds of Quakerism

Quaker faith & practice 22.42

Dear Friends,

When we wrote to you last year, we hoped the pandemic would be behind us by now. We looked forward to coming together in person at Yearly Meeting Gathering and to seeing our trading activities bounce back. Sadly, this hasn't happened.

It has been a year of contrasts. We have faced the challenges of Covid-19 and seen our Quaker meeting houses, Friends House and Swarthmoor Hall close for long periods. But we have also seen rapid change, with innovative forms of Quaker worship and witness.

Because of a reduction in income at Friends House and Swarthmoor Hall, we have to make savings. But our determination to support and deliver Quaker work is unchanged.

- Hundreds of Quakers have taken part in preparations for COP26, coordinated by our Sustainability and Social Justice team.
- In May we held an online conference that looked at how education can create sustainable peace and heal divisions. We were joined by over 500 people from 63 countries.
- In August more than 1,000 Friends came together online for Yearly Meeting Gathering.

Sustaining this work is a challenge. A loss of £2 million in trading income means we cannot continue to run a deficit and draw on reserves. Meetings, members and attenders increased their giving by 50 per cent last year. If this can be maintained, it will make a huge difference.

Quaker work needs Quakers' financial support.

Some are better able to contribute than others. If we all give what we can afford, we can support Quaker work equitably. Help us ensure that Quaker communities thrive and that Quaker voices are heard.

The work you fund

With your support, we deliver a huge breadth of work – from sustaining our faith to living out our values in the world. We have highlighted two areas of Quaker work here. Find out about all the work you help us achieve in our annual review:

www.quaker.org.uk/annualreview.

Local Development Workers

Local Development Workers (LDWs) in a specific region of Britain work with local Quaker communities on all things Quaker. They respond to requests from meetings, such as strengthening the worship and spiritual life of communities, growing all-age communities and supporting volunteer role-holders in Quaker meetings.

The work of LDWs is responsive to the needs of each Quaker community. They work in partnership with the local communities; providing support through the individual assistance of each LDW and by forming a link to the wider network of Quaker resources and the national Quaker structure.

“An area meeting nomination convenor had a series of conversations with their local development worker about challenges they were facing. Over time a new way of thinking about roles was used by the nominations group based on the discernment of the gifts Friends have and which roles they might be suited to. As a result, the nominations convenor said that the process felt less desperate and that time was being taken to discern more in this area. Working with the LDW had helped them to remember to trust the process and to try new things.”

In 2020 we spent £2.5 million on Supporting Quaker communities

Climate Justice

Quakers recognise that the climate and ecological crisis is enmeshed with global economic injustice. We demand climate justice; action on the climate must uphold the rights of the people worst affected, and rich countries like the UK must contribute our fair share.

Quakers in Britain are working to change the economic and social systems in which we live to bring about a justice-focused transformation to a zero-carbon economy.

Quaker presence at COP26, Glasgow

The COP26 climate summit is a key moment for climate justice mobilisation. Postponed to 2021, COP26 will be the first climate summit in the wake of Covid-19. The pandemic has highlighted the devastating global impact of our unsustainable and ecologically destructive economic system. The Covid-19 crisis is a rare opportunity for us to change the course of humanity for the better. This is the backdrop to COP26, making our advocacy and activism is now even more important. COP26 must urgently commit to a just recovery and a green “new normal”.

The Sustainability and Social Justice team is coordinating Quakers in Britain's presence at COP26. The team's preparations in the lead-up to the summit include both activist support and task force lobbying.

Witness through action

Your contributions: making a difference

Beyond our own area meeting, funds are required for the wider organisation of Friends and the work we undertake centrally. Without these, we would be a scattered collection of small meetings with no coherence or shared witness.

Thank you for your support

Regular giving

We give because we have a commitment as members to do so. We try, as members, to follow what BYM is doing and to take our share in the responsibility for what that is.
Janet Gilbraith, Friend

I give money to BYM because I deeply value the Quaker mix of encouragement for spiritual exploration, work for social justice and equality and environmental concern. BYM is us: it both organises our wider contribution to society and nourishes our grassroots.
Margaret Laurie, Friend

Legacy gifts

The reason for leaving the legacy is my sense of gratitude for the existence of Quakers in Britain and for the richness that belonging to a meeting...has brought to my life.
